I'm not saying I lost the Fourth Annual Charleston Distance Run because my opponents were into blood-doping, but I can't help but be a little suspicious.

All I know is that those 724 people who finished ahead of me looked mighty lively. I really didn't think much about it until two older women in their 50s passed me by actually leaping over my head instead of simply running around me.

To the people who have tried it, blood doping is the best thing to hit runners since legs. They take a pint of blood from their bodies, freeze it and then put it back in just before the race thus giving themselves an extra pint of blood. It became a big thing in the Montreal Olympics and apparently has made it to Charleston. Which is unusual for West Virginia, to be only a few months behind the rest of the world.

Of course I can't prove that any of my opponents used blood-doping against me. It's just the ones who snickered as they went by me that I really wondered about. Then there was another guy who I overheard telling a fellow runner that he had run eight miles without taking a breath.

But that's the sort of thing you have to deal with when you get into big time racing.

My time this year was 2:11:55, good for a finish of 725th. And there were some classy runners behind me including eight-year-old Wayne Bowman, his dad, Bryant, and 69-year-old John Pianfelli.

And Linda Meckfessel, the only Junior Leaguer in the race, got the scare of her running life when she saw me pass her several times in the race. I finally decided to slow down near the end and let her beat me which was the only gentlemanly thing to do. I also was afraid that if I had beaten her, she would have used her influence as a city councilperson to keep my neighborhood streets from getting paved.

But the most satisfying part of the race to me was once again beating Jeff Galloway, in what has turned out to be one of the top individual duels in the race year after year.

Galloway won the first Distance Run here in 1973. In 1974, I really turned on the speed and beat Galloway, who dropped out with an injury. Then last year, Galloway beat me again to take a 2-1 lead in the series.

But once again, revenge became mine against Galloway as I finished ahead of the "Atlanta Antelope" Saturday. Galloway had to stop at the 11-mile mark after reinjuring a tendon in his foot. My tendons, however, held up beautifully.

So now Galloway and I are deadlocked at 2-2 in the series which means that we're
